"--"MAYBE I SHOULD RUN ALONG AND JOIN THE RAT RACE EVERYBODY MY AGE NEVER SEEMS TO WIN. BUT THEN AGAIN, I COULD LIST OFF THE THINGS I WANNA DO BEFORE I DIE UNTIL I'M DEAD SO I GUESS I BEST RUN ALONG AND TRY."

Windows-down singer-songwriter pop artist Brendan Abernathy is defined by his contemplative verses and big choruses, giving a voice to a generation of buried dreamers fed up with 'the real world.'

Once fully immersed in what he calls "the rat race," Brendan Abernathy chose to leave behind promising prospects in business and healthcare in favor of pursuing a career in music. The pressures of what makes sense and looks good to an outsider weighed heavily as he labored over a decision that really was being written into his life from outside his control. Trying to decide what to do with his life, he battled what most face -- Indecision. Nostalgia. Transition. Rejection. The things that haunt every decision, he gives voice to with intentional lyrics and big choral hooks. From the second row of a Taylor Swift concert he had the epiphany that he couldn't "stand idly by and watch someone else live his dream." Now, he pursues his purpose of helping others realize their dreams through creating and performing music.

Former frontman and manager of Athens, GA favorite rock band Light Brigade, Brendan launched his reborn career with the release his first single, Story I Can't Write, in April of 2019. He has since had successful releases of The Rat Race, Adelaide, and 5'9", amassing over 150,000 streams in just 3 months. In a refreshing return to his natural tendencies to write raw lyrics with pop melodies, Brendan will be releasing a song a month for the next several months.

Beginning in August, Brendan is traveling around the United States couch-surfing and living out of his car, playing intimate, high-energy house shows, built around creating a genuine connection with each person in the audience.
